

Ovarian Cyst

9/07/2017

Dear Dr. Lin,

Here is my testimonial. Thanks for just using my initials at the end.

In the summer of 2016 I was not feeling well, so much so that I expressed my concern to my primary care doctor. The symptoms I described prompted her to order a pelvic ultrasound followed by an MRI. The results showed a complex ovarian cyst the size of an orange. My doctor and the radiologist suspected the worst and I was referred to a gynecological surgeon for consultation. I made the soonest appointment which was in a week and a half. In the interim I said a prayer to find the perfect practitioners and resources to heal and with that I began to do some research. A friend recommended I go on the website called www.beatcancer.org. There I saw a list of doctors that were certified by this organization as oncological consultants, and I found Dr. Lin's information. I called him and the conversation proved a turning point for me. He explained that without a biopsy there could be no definitive diagnosis, and it was risky to have surgery because in the event there was a malignancy, cells could spread. The thing he said to me that was a game-changer was that regardless of diagnosis, the treatment would be the same. I decided on my own to cancel my appointment with the surgeon for the time being.

I began treatments two to three times a week with Dr. Lin for several months and began to feel a lot better. I was also following a clean diet, with Dr. Lin's supplement protocol. I was also doing a lot of spiritual and emotional release work on myself, acupuncture, far infrared biomat, rebounding exercise, self-healing with energy medicine, Qi Gong and Chinese herbs with a practitioner of Classical Chinese Medicine. Here is where my story gets very interesting:

Several months into my multi-faceted health regimen something went terribly wrong with the Chinese herbs that the herbalist had given me; they were too strong and my abdomen began to swell to the point where it was unbearable. A follow-up pelvic ultrasound revealed that the cyst had not gotten smaller. Dr. Lin suggested it was perhaps time for me to have the surgery, considering my situation, and since I was post-menopause I underwent a complete hysterectomy. The biopsy from the tissue analyzed during the surgery, to the surgeon's amazement, revealed a malignancy in the ovarian cyst but it was completely self contained, with absolutely nothing affected anywhere else- nothing! The surgeon could not believe it.

Five months after the surgery my blood test results showed that I am completely clear. My CA 125 level, which had been at 600 a year before, was now at a more-than-normal level of 19. I am on a maintenance plan with Dr. Lin now and feel blessed to have found him. I am convinced that his treatments and protocol -- and his belief in my recovery -- were major reasons for my amazing outcome, and for this I am extremely grateful. I believe that Dr. Lin was the answer to my prayers.
